Radiant Kindness: Exploring Color and Community

Boulder Museum of Contemporary Art (BMoCA) and artist Olive Moya present a vibrant and uplifting exhibition that celebrates the transformative power of kindness, the expressive language of color, and the profound impact they have by building joyful communities. This bold exhibition fills the Belmar, Lakewood, and Standley Lake libraries with a kaleidoscope of hues, funky shapes, and personal narratives that remind us of the goodness in community and the power of collective compassion. Each library will feature complementary programs and workshops throughout the exhibition inspired by artist Olive Moya and focused on cultivating kindness.

Olive Moya

Olive Moya is a visual artist living and working in Denver. Originally from Southern California, Moya received her bachelor of fine arts from Otis College of Art + Design in 2011. Her work's bold, graphic colors, defined edges, line work, and movement are referential to the artist's background in illustration and lettering. She describes her paintings as "abstract storytelling," influenced in part by her early study of photography. She has created commissions for The Denver Art Museum, Denver Theater District, The Virgin Low-Rise Las Vegas, Art In Public Places Vail and exhibited work at ReCreative Denver, Dateline Gallery, and The Gallery @ The Bus Stop in Boulder.
